The Committee on Northern Population Research

Since its formation in 1977, the purposes of the Committee have been to:

(a) encourage northern population studies to be undertaken by universities, as well as government and other agencies;

(b) establish an informal clearing house of information pertaining to sources of northern demographic data;

(c) prepare the organization of workshops, conferences and other meetings on northern population problems to be held in the North, and to involve a large measure of direction and participation by the autochthonous people;

(d) plan and sponsor one or more longer-term research programs to be carried out, in the main, by university based researchers;

(e) submit to appropriate bodies, for their consideration, briefs or reports on matters pertaining to the collection, analysis or reporting of demographic data.

Le Comité de recherche sur les populations nordiques

Depuis sa création en 1977, le Comité s'est efforcé:

(a) d'encourager les agences gouvernementales et autres, ainsi que les universités à entreprendre des études sur les populations nordiques;

(b) d'établir un service d'information en démographie nordique;

(c) de préparer l'organisation de colloques, conférences et autres réunions portant sur divers problèmes touchant les populations nordiques; ces manifestations, tenues dans le Nord, doivent impliquer une participation active des autochtones;

(d) de planifier et parrainer un ou plusieurs programmes de recherche à plus long terme, ces programmes devant être menés principalement par des chercheurs universitaires;

(e) de soumettre pour considération aux organismes appropriés, des rapports ou des résumés ayant trait à la collecte, à l'analyse et à des compte-rendus de données démographiques.

INTRODUCTION

"Research in the sciences ... is fundamental to developments in technology, human relationship and welfare, even the arts. Fundamental to research is bibliography".(1)

The Committee on Northern Population Research's effort to provide a systematic record of scientific, technical, and general publications concerned with social demography in northern Canada began in 1978 with the publication of Northern Population Bibliography - Canada*. The present volume, (which brings to 1131 the number of publications reviewed to date), indexes and summarizes 493 publications; most of these were published within the past three years.

As with the first bibliography it is intended this publication will serve as a practical working tool for researchers, administrators, and teachers whose interests or responsibilities concern the northern populations of Canada.

In keeping with the purpose of the project, the subject matter contained in the bibliography covers a wide range of scientific disciplines other than demography. These include matters of social concern, and economics, and in fact any subject which was thought likely to increase the general understanding of the dynamics of Canada's northern population.

This bibliography reflects the results of increasing interest in northern population studies. Considerable progress has been made in the accumulation and analysis of basic demographic data, (births, deaths and migration), and in the methodology of population projections for both the Northwest Territories and Yukon, as well as the northern parts of the provinces. For the territories, systematic population projections, and analyses, are being made by the Northwest Territories and Yukon Governments as well as by the Federal Government. Of growing importance are publications resulting from public bodies such as the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline and the Alaska Highway Pipeline inquiries as well as regional social-impact studies such as the Working Group on the Lancaster Sound Regional Study and the Ontario Commission on the Northern Environment. Noticeable additions to the bibliography also include material dealing with public health research such as nutrition, and alcohol related problems; employment and labour statistics; the social effects of improved communications; statistics on the Metis population; research on the relationship between population and renewable resources, and a number of important overview and survey reports on Indian quality of life trends in the provinces and the territories.

The most significant difference between this volume of the northern population bibliography and the 1978 bibliography results from the decision to use the significant expertise, and automated bibliographic resources of the Arctic Institute of North America's Arctic Science and Technology Information System (ASTIS) located at the University of Calgary.

Cooperation between the Committee and ASTIS has resulted in the production of this bibliography in a format which, it is hoped, will be most appropriate for the needs of a wide variety of users. Accessibility to the information in this bibliography will be further enhanced because all the documents referenced have been included in the ASTIS bibliographic data base which provides printed and online information retrieval services.

SCOPE OF THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

The literature covered in this bibliography, numbering almost five hundred listings, spans the period from 1972 and earlier, to 1981. The breakdown, by various periods is as follows:

Year	No. of listings
1972 and prior	50
1973	12
1974	13
1975	26
1976	35
1977	77
1978	107
1979	89
1980	45
1981	39
Total:	493

A "space line" was drawn on a map of Canada which included both the Territories, and the northern parts of all provinces, except the Maritimes. In general, the geographic area conforms to the regional sections of Canada included in the later editions of the Arctic Bibliography.

The breakdown of listings pertaining specifically to main areas is:

Main Area	No. of listings
Canada general	84
Canadian provinces	137
Canadian Arctic (i.e. both Northwest Territories and Yukon)	68
Northwest Territories	141
Yukon	49
Other	14
Total	493

Literature covered includes material published in both official languages: approximately eight per cent of the listings are in French or English and French. About two per cent are published in Inuktitut.

The bibliography is in two sections: a register, and indexes by subject, geographic area and author. The register is numbered in ascending order as processed by ASTIS. The register provides the document citation and abstract (ASTIS generally follows the ISBD(G) format for annotated texts). Most of the listings have abstracts included. The indexes are cross-referenced to the register numbers.

Those wishing to obtain documents cited in the bibliography should first contact their local research libraries, or the publisher of the document. If this approach is unsuccessful the document may be obtainable from the location where it was indexed by ASTIS. This is indicated by a code on the last line of the citation, preceeding the abstract. These codes are explained under Location Codes.

The indexing included multiple entries under author, subject, geographic headings and, wherever possible, reference to specific communities. Each listing was indexed under an average of about four subject headings, two geographic and two author headings.

APPRECIATION

The searching for and preparation of listings began in June 1981 and was essentially completed by the end of February 1982. Completion of the project in such a period was made possible only by the help of many people. In particular a debt of gratitude is acknowledged to Denise Harvey who was the working heart of the project, and to Judy Flax of the Arctic Institute of North America and Pat McKimm who indexed, filed and in many other ways helped prepare the bibliography for publication. It also should be stated that without the expert advice and cooperation of Ross Goodwin, the project could not have proceeded in such a timely and efficient manner.

There is no claim made, of course, that this bibliography contains all publications dealing with northern demography. However, the bibliography does represent the Committee on Northern Population Research's continuing effort to locate and describe the broad range of existing literature, and sources of information, concerned with the population of northern Canada. Undoubtedly the present bibliography contains errors, and important omissions will have occurred. It would be appreciated if readers would draw these to our attention.

INTRODUCTION

"La recherche scientifique ... est essentielle au progrès dans les domaines de la technologie, des relations humaines, de la santé et même des arts. La bibliographie est essentielle à la recherche".(1)

L'effort du Comité de recherche sur les populations nordiques, en vue d'élaborer un index systématique des publications scientifiques, techniques et générales traitant de la démographie sociale du nord du Canada, a débuté, en 1978, par la publication de la Bibliographie sur les populations nordiques canadiennes". Le présent volume répertorie et résume 493 publications qui ont paru, pour la plupart, au cours des trois dernières années. (Le nombre de publications inventoriées à ce jour passe donc à 1131).

Cette publication a été conçue, de même que la première bibliographie, pour servir d'outil de travail pratique aux chercheurs, aux administrateurs et aux professeurs qui s'intéressent aux populations nordiques ou assument des responsabilités s'y rattachant.

En concordance avec le but de ce projet, le contenu de la bibliographie couvre un large éventail de disciplines scientifiques en plus du domaine démographique. Il comprend des sujets d'ordre social et économique et, en fait, tous les sujets qui semblaient de nature à faire mieux comprendre la dynamique des populations nordiques du Canada.

Cette bibliographie reflète les résultats de l'intérêt croissant que suscitent les études sur les populations nordiques. Des progrès considérables ont été accomplis dans la collecte et l'analyse des données démographiques de base (naissances, décès et migration) et dans la méthodologie des projections démographiques pour ce qui est des Territoires du Nord-Ouest et du Yukon aussi bien que des régions nordiques des provinces. Dans le cas des Territoires, des projections démographiques systématiques et des analyses sont effectuées, présentement, par les gouvernements des Territoires du Nord-Ouest et du Yukon et par le gouvernement fédéral. De plus en plus de publications voient le jour, suite aux recherches entreprises par des Commissions publiques telles que les enquêtes sur Le Pipeline de la vallée du Mackenzie et Le Pipeline de la route de l'Alaska et grâce aussi à des études sur les répercussions sociales régionales comme celles du Groupe de recherche sur l'Etude régionale de Lancaster Sound et de l'Ontario Commission on the Northern Environment. Cette bibliographie s'enrichit aussi de documents traitant des sujets suivants: la nutrition et les problèmes liés à la consommation d'alcool; les statistiques de l'emploi et de la main d'oeuvre; les répercussions sociales de l'amélioration des communications; le recensement de la population métisse; la recherche sur le rapport existant entre la population et les ressources renouvelables; enfin, un certain nombre d'importants rapports d'enquêtes sur l'évolution de la qualité de vie des Indiens des provinces et des territoires.

Ce qui différencie surtout la présente bibliographie sur les populations nordiques de celle de 1978 tient à la décision d'utiliser la grande compétence et les ressources bibliographiques informatisées de l'Arctic Science and Technology Information System (ASTIS), de l'Arctic Institute of North America à l'Université de Calgary.

La collaboration entre le Comité et ASTIS a permis de produire cette bibliographie dans un format qui, espère-t-on, sera le plus propre à satisfaire aux différents besoins d'un grand nombre d'utilisateurs. L'accès à l'information, contenue dans cette bibliographie, sera d'autant plus aisé que tous les documents auxquels elle renvoie ont été inclus dans la banque de données bibliographiques d'ASTIS, lequel offre des services de consultation des documents en modes conversationnel ou différé.

APERÇU DE LA BIBLIOGRAPHIE

La matière traitée dans cette bibliographie, comportant presque 500 entrées, couvre la période allant de 1972 et antérieurement, jusqu'à 1981. Le nombre d'entrées se rapportant à chaque période figure ci-dessous:

Année	Nombre d'entrées
1972 et avant	50
1973	12
1974	13
1975	26
1976	35
1977	77
1978	107
1979	89
1980	45
1981	39
Total:	493

Une "ligne de démarcation" a été tracée sur une carte du Canada incluant les Territoires et les régions nordiques de chaque province, à l'exception des Maritimes. En général, la topographie du territoire correspond aux sections des régions du Canada incluses dans les plus récentes éditions de l'Arctic Bibliography.

Le nombre d'entrées se rapportant expressément aux principales régions se lit comme suit:

Région principale	Nombre d'entrées
Le Canada dans son ensemble	84
Les provinces canadiennes	137
L'arctique canadien (c'est-à-dire les Territoires du Nord-Ouest et le Yukon)	68
Les Territoires du Nord-Ouest	141
Le Yukon	49
Autres	14
Total:	493

La matière traitée comporte de la documentation publiée dans les deux langues officielles: à peu près huit pour cent des entrées sont en français, ou en anglais et en français; environ deux pour cent paraissent en Inuktitut.

La bibliographie se divise en deux parties: un registre et des index de vedettes-matières, de régions géographiques et de noms d'auteur. Le registre est numéroté en ordre croissant tel que programmé par ASTIS. Il fournit la citation du document et un résumé (ASTIS se conforme habituellement au format ISBD(G) pour les textes annotés). La plupart des entrées comprennent des résumés. Les index sont à double renvoi, en concordance avec la numérotation du registre.

Les personnes qui désirent se procurer les documents mentionnés dans la bibliographie devraient, d'abord, s'adresser au centre de documentation de leur localité ou écrire à l'éditeur. Si leur démarche est infructueuse, elles peuvent obtenir le document à l'adresse mentionnée dans l'index d'ASTIS. Ce lieu est désigné par un code à la dernière ligne de la citation, juste avant le résumé. La signification de ces codes est expliquée sous la mention Codes de localisation.

Le répertoriage comporte un grand nombre d'entrées, classées par noms d'auteur, vedettes-matières, localisations géographiques et, chaque fois que cela est possible, s'ajoute une référence aux collectivités spécifiques. L'index de chaque entrée compte en moyenne quatre vedettes-matières, deux localisations géographiques et deux rubriques de noms d'auteur.

REMERCIEMENTS

La recherche et la préparation des entrées a été entreprise en juin 1981 pour se terminer à la fin de février 1982. C'est grâce à l'aide d'un grand nombre de personnes que ce projet a pu être achevé en un tel laps de temps. Un témoignage de gratitude est dû, en particulier, à Denise Harvey qui a été l'âme du projet et à Judy Flax, de l'Arctic Institute of North America, et Pat McKimm qui ont répertorié, classé les documents et aidé de multiples manières à préparer la publication de cette bibliographie. Il faut aussi mentionner que, sans les avis judicieux et la coopération de Ross Goodwin, le projet n'aurait pu être mené à bien avec autant de rapidité et d'efficacité.

Nul ne prétend, naturellement, que cette bibliographie rend compte de toutes les publications traitant de la démographie nordique. Elle témoigne, cependant, de l'effort persistant du Comité de recherche sur les populations nordiques pour localiser et décrire la documentation nombreuse et diverse existant sur le sujet et les sources d'information s'y rapportant. Des erreurs se sont sans doute glissées dans cette bibliographie, et elle présente peut-être des lacunes importantes. Nous apprécierions que nos lecteurs les signalent à notre attention.

SOURCES

Listings for the bibliography were obtained by surveying published bibliographies, library catalogues and similar sources from the following libraries and documentation centers: /

Les entrées faisant partie de la bibliographie ont été obtenues en passant en revue les bibliographies déjà publiées, les catalogues des bibliothèques et d'autres sources analogues. Ce matériel provenait des bibliothèques et centres de documentation suivants:

- Arctic Science and Technology Information System (ASTIS)
  Arctic Institute of North America, University of Calgary
- Bibliographie du Québec
- Boreal Institute for Northern Studies, University of Alberta
- Centre d'Etudes Nordiques, Université Laval, Québec
- Indian and Northern Affairs Library, Ottawa
- Comité de recherche sur les populations nordiques
  Département de démographie, Université de Montréal
- McGill University, Centre for Northern Studies and Research, Montreal
- The Ontario Institute for Studies in Education

A great deal of useful material was found in published regional bibliographies, library accessions lists, or the periodic listings issued by the above mentioned northern centers. Other bibliographic entries (primarily those without abstracts), were obtained from references in publications known to have resulted from northern population research. /

Une grande partie du matériel utilisé a été recueilli dans des publications de bibliographies régionales, des listes d'acquisitions de bibliothèques, ou des catalogues publiés régulièrement par les centres nordiques ci-haut mentionnés. Les autres rubriques bibliographiques (surtout celles qui ne comportent pas de résumé) ont été tirées de renvois, figurant dans des publications qu'on savait être le résultat de recherches sur les populations nordiques.

A well-documented instance of introduced disease which caused high mortality among the Saglermiut is seen to have had an impact on other Eskimo groups as well. The findings and conclusions of the Task Force on Manpower Services to Native People are presented in this text with a view to providing a stimulus and some information to the very healthy debate which is currently under way in Canada concerning ways of reducing the unemployment rate amongst Native people. After presenting some data on the Indian, Metis and Inuit labour force, the discussion paper analyzes the factors which, over the years, have contributed to placing Canadians of Indian and Inuit ancestry in a most difficult economic situation. An attempt is made throughout this text to restrict the discussion as much as possible, to issues which fall within the jurisdiction of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. (Au)

... The history of the various Indian tribes or nations in the Atlantic Provinces and Quebec, none of whom had a written language, is based on the observations of early white travellers, the people's own oral tradition, and modern archaeology. Artifacts exhumed from ancient burial sites and camping grounds reveal much about their foods, implements and other cultural aspects of the people before recorded history. Often the approximate date of settlement and migration can be determined by relating the results of Carbon 14 tests to the modern calendar. (Au)

... The essays included in this volume are presented in three sections that reflect their respective themes, sources, and issues. Thus, the first section through focussing on the distant past, provides an historical depth and dimension to contemporary Inuit patterns of occupancy and land use. The second section identifies wildlife resources and seasonal subsistence activities, and delimits areas of land and sea harvested in the experience of informants now residing in five communities of northern coastal Labrador. ..., section three explores the depth and richness of the people's cultural traditions and dependence on the resources of the land and sea, revealing a viable and integrated contemporary aboriginal culture. In linking the present with the past, it bridges the two previous sections, and at the same time, it provides an insight into Inuit attitudes to their intellectual, social, and physical environment. ... The harp-seal controversy and the Inuit economy / Wenzel, G.W.

The writer points out that Inuit communities depend more on the ringed seal than on the harp seal in economic terms. The ringed seal is a primary food resource and the sale of the skins of ringed seals provide a significant portion of the cash income of the Inuit. The public protests against the killing of the baby harp seals has also affected the hunting of ringed seals. While the price for harp seal skins has remained fairly stable, the demand for the rough ringed seal skins has gone down, affecting adversely the Inuit economy in the north. (ASTIS)

... Internal socio-economic and physical problems unique to single-industry communities may inhibit orderly resource development in isolated regions. One of the more significant of these problems is related to labour turnover and an apparent dissatisfaction with life in resource communities. The purpose of this research was to study single-industry communities in isolated regions of Canada in order to identify and evaluate the problems and to suggest ways to overcome them. A sample of communities was selected for an empirical study which reflected a variety of considerations. The communities had to be related to the development of a resource. The sample had to be small enough to be studied within the time and monetary constraints of the project and yet large enough to contain a good cross-section. The sample included eleven communities from Labrador to the British Columbia coast. Some of the communties selected were old and some were new. Some were poorly planned while others were well-planned. Finally, the communities selected varied in size, complexity and accessibility. ... (Au)

Since 1969, Baker Lake residents have expressed concern about the effects of mineral exploration activities on renewable resources, particularly caribou, sustaining their community. Responding to these concerns, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs in March 1977 issued a temporary "halt" on land-use activities in a 78,000 square km (30,000 square mi) area around Baker Lake and announced that a study into the potential effects of exploration activities in the area would be undertaken. This report presents the results of that study. It examines renewable resource harvest, biological characteristics of fish and wildlife species supporting this harvest, industrial exploration and development, and potential impacts of industrial activities on harvested species. It also identifies areas regarded as critical for maintaining traditionally harvested populations and presents recommendations on special controls or prohibitions for industrial activities in each critical area. Bibliography: p.28-35.

The question of Caribou Eskimo origins has been debated for more than 50 years. The generally accepted view today is one originally elaborated by Elmer Harp: the historic Caribou Eskimos are descended from Thule Eskimos who migrated south along the west coast of Hudson Bay early in the present millennium. A competing view, originally stated by William Taylor, is that the Caribou Eskimos are descended from people who migrated overland from the Copper Eskimo area sometime in the 17th century A.D. In this paper I review the relevant evidence and conclude that both views are correct in part, Taylor's more so than Harp's. I then present a new hypothesis in which the discrepancies between the two are resolved. (Au)

The term acculturative stress refers to that range of states or individual behaviours which are difficult for the individual and disruptive for his social group. Two Cree communities were selected for study in 1969 prior to a hydroelectric project taking place in their areas and it was noted that the levels of stress and marginality were high in both samples. This high level has been interpreted as a function of the degree of acculturation which has already taken place. If the legal agreement with the hydroelectric authorities proves acceptable among the people, then the acculturative stress and pressures will eventually be reduced. (ASTIS)

Despite widespread concern for the needs of the northern people and for environmental protection, a concern professedly shared by the federal government, the Bathurst Island controversy illustrates: 1) that the stated national northern development priorities of people and the environment before resource development continues to be mere rhetoric and is not supported by current realities; 2) that the process of community consultations is merely a facade, for the views of experienced hunters and trappers are not taken into consideration in decision-making; 3) that there is an inherent conflict of interests occurring in the one structure that exists to represent the peoples' interests and, in cases of a conflict, the interests of resource development companies prevail. The manufacturing base could grow if we recognize the problems and develop our own skills and initiative. The role played by the government in the North is, as you know, a very important one. Public services are vital and necessary and must be sustained in the future not only at the provincial level but at the local level also. The important thing, however, is that the government promote a feeling of optimism about the North in the business world so that development does not become a means to itself but the basis for growth. ... As such, dysfunctional elements are suggested in Netsilik aboriginal social organization, stemming from the contradiction of the general Eskimo ethos of generosity with their own somewhat less than generous behavior in respect of the strategy for kindred endogamy. I would finally suggest, therefore, that the synchronic comparative analysis of the infanticide and other social practices of the Iglulik, Taqramiut, Copper and Netsilik Eskimo may also be regarded as providing a diachronic model of the response of an Eskimo social organization to the conditions of increasing environmental pressure. ... ACU

Traces the cultural changes of the Netsilik Eskimo from 1920 to the early 1960's. With the introduction of guns, hunting and sealing became more efficient. Fishing nets meant larger catches, steel traps resulted in greater yields. The establishment of missionaries gradually ended the nomadic existence of the Eskimos, weakened the social integration of the band, and resulted in the emergence of the family as the basic socio-economic unit. The missionaries also resulted in monogamous marital stability, and changes in belief of religion and myths. With the establishment of the Dept. of Northern Affairs, a formal education system, family housing and medical services became available. Political participation in local administration also emerged. The Environmental and Socio-Economic Terms and Conditions dated May 10, 1978, prepared by the Northern Pipeline Agency go a long way to provide those things that the pipeline Company must do. But in themselves, they do not assign the responsibility or provide the means for other departments or agencies to manage the anticipated impacts, nor do they spell out what the Agency itself will and will not do. Many of the anticipated impacts in the environmental, and most particularly the socio-economic, field cannot be controlled or even managed by the pipeline company. (Au)

The study offers a description and analysis of the social and cultural aspects of traditional and modern adoptive practices. ... A distinction is made between adoption as exchange and adoption as caretakership, and these are seen as affecting the relationship of the child relative both to the adopting and natal families of the adopted one. Adoption in infancy is viewed as the model for all adoption, but the adoption of older children, teenagers and even of adults is also considered. The several hypotheses advanced to account for the relatively high frequency and pervasive character of adoptive practices are discussed and evaluated, and the author offers his own explanation of adoption among Inuit. His account has implications for the study of Inuit social organization and for a general theory of kinship. (Au)

Animal resource use, present and historic, is examined for five southeast Baffin Island communities. In all communities, ringed seal were found to be the single largest component of the harvest and were hunted on a year-round basis. The most important fish species utilized, often to the exclusion of other available species, was the Arctic char. The Common Eider was the most important bird species used. The latter two species are seasonally important. ... (Au)

The mental health problems that Natives encounter in Ontario are connected with many aspects of life .... Poverty, of course, is a major factor. The history of the cultural and value conflict that they have experienced is also a major factor. Education, language problems, the medical, religious and spiritual imperialism of our clergy and doctors and those of the U.S.A. have caused problems. The location and staffing of mental health and other human service systems increase mental health problems. The process of child development as it exists on many reserves creates many problems. I will try to discuss some of the historical issues, go on to deal with some of the areas mentioned above, and then discuss issues related to mental health services to Natives. Finally, I will present some recommendations. (Au)

Recent developments in ethnographic research in the Upper Churchill River drainage of northwestern Saskatchewan are reviewed. These include an analysis of the spatial organization of trapping economics, and an examination of behavioral responses to current technological impact (particularly housing, imported food and machinery, and new roads) in a southern Chipewyan community. Although high-income trappers generally exploit the largest trapping areas at the greatest distances from a primary settlement, the increasing congregation of short-distance trappers near the village may be exacerbating ecological and economic instability associated with new consumer goods and purchasing habits. Another direction of research involves analysis of economic and social interactions between Chipewyan and Cree communities that shed light upon processes of inter-tribal communication, symbiosis, enmity and identity management. (Au)

The author relates the impact that the North West Company had on the Indian tribes in the Athabasca and Mackenzie river basins. Between their arrival in 1778 and their withdrawal in 1814 the Company brought disease, disrupted tribal relations and hunting patterns, and precipitated changes in the balance of power between the Indians which caused a deterioration of inter-tribal relations. The Indians consciously withdrew from the fur trade because of competition with each other, alcohol and gifts which lessened their desire to work, and, in the case of the Chipewyans, the severe and inhumane treatment accorded them by the Company. Most of the development opportunities currently under consideration for Yukon remain speculative. Both spatial and sectoral linkages occur in all of these initiatives. Transportation and power infrastructure are two requirements which are common in most cases. Highway upgrading is expected to continue whether other development takes places or not, but [no] new roads or rail construction will probably take place unless new mines or other resource projects are developed. Mining development is expected to extend into the eastern section of Yukon, with attendant benefits for service centres located on current access routes. Tourism development, the Shakwak Project, and the Alaska Highway gas pipeline may have their greatest impact on centres along the Alaska and Klondike Highways. Smelter development would benefit Whitehorse and the Faro-Ross River area. (Au)

The physical and social differences among regions of the Northwest Territories suggest that a variety of approaches may be required to promote development: an emphasis on traditional activities, training and work rotation where the economic base is limited and previous exposure to wage economy minimal; development of a transportation infrastructure to support development where major resource development potential occurs; and strengthening of the local economy where major income and population centres now exist. The territorial economy has a unique duality. There is a developing modern economy based on government and mining which, in terms of its effects, is concentrated in the larger centres .... The traditional economy of hunting, fishing, and trapping is crucial to many small settlements. The major factor in development for the Northwest Territories will be the linking of the modern economy and the traditional economy without destroying the latter and eliminating one of the options presently available to residents. ... A discussion of archaeological and ethnohistoric evidence is used as the basis for offering a model of the Thule population expansion and occupation of western Hudson Bay c. A.D. 1200-1775. ... The proposed model states that a coastal Thule population from the Roes Welcome Sound area began a southward migration to occupy the coastal regions as far south as Eskimo Point sometime around A.D. 1200. Seasonal forays to the interior barrens and to coastal areas as far south as Churchill undoubtedly occurred shortly after initial expansion but year-round occupation of the barrens apparently occurred only since c. That all historic Canadian Eskimo cultures developed in situ from an earlier Thule culture base is a position generally accepted by most contemporary investigators. However, for the Caribou Eskimo area on the west coast of Hudson Bay, that view is either unsupported by or directly in conflict with data ... and the Eskimos' own view of their past. An alternative sequence postulating a late 17th century migration from the central Arctic coast to the Hudson Bay coast would appear to be the only way to account for both those data and other archaeological evidence bearing on the problem. If this hypothesis is correct, then there may have been much more extensive population movement in the central Arctic between the initial Thule occupation and the beginning of the historic period than the conventional view would permit. The extent of Thule occupation of the Canadian Arctic is examined in relation to environmental factors in an attempt to determine the environmental limits on human occupation of the region. Maps of relevant parameters are presented and discussed. It is suggested that the Thule people were equipped to tolerate the direct effects of even the most severe climatic episodes. The avoidance or abandonment of particular areas is explained in terms of inadequate resources that are a consequence of severe climate and ice conditions, rather than the direct effects of climatic stress. This report describes a post-occupancy evaluation of a small mining community in the high Arctic. Providing superior housing, having wives work and integrating singles, Inuits (the indigenous people) and families successfully established a viable community. Fewer problems were encountered than is usual in other isolated cold regions communities. The central focal point of the town, a large dome, was diluted by later construction of buildings housing separate recreational and social facilities. Since the buildings are too costly to remove, the only method of restoring the focal point is to build connecting links at upper levels of the recreational buildings. This would only restore the focal point to a fraction of its original effectiveness. Nanisivik is an important lesson for designing future cold regions communities. It provides a successful example of housing, organization of living groups, and integration of working and living environments, and a classic example of missed focal point design. (Au)

From the beginning of the historical record, Indians living around the bottom of James Bay are known to have engaged in regular summer raids against the Inuit living 800 kilometres to the northeast around Richmond Gulf. These raids were motivated by a complex of psychological and cultural needs. For several decades they were condemned but tacitly supported by the Hudson's Bay Company traders in Hudson Bay. Eventually the conflict proved detrimental to the fur trade and the company took steps to promote peaceful co-existence between Indian and Inuit. More importantly, increased involvement in the trade by the Indians re-oriented their activities away from traditional warlike activities. By the close of the eighteenth century raids by the James Bay Indians had ceased and by the middle of the nineteenth century Indians living north of the Fort George River had also made peace with their Inuit neighbours. Until recently, certain Eskimo groups were reported to practice female infanticide in the belief that the time spent suckling a girl would delay the mother's next opportunity to bear a son ... Eskimo beliefs regarding the effects of infanticide on fertility, however, are in accord with the results of research on the relation of fertility and lactation: The cessation of lactation following infanticide would significantly shorten the expected interval until the next birth. Given this fact and available field data regarding the parameters of Eskimo population growth, the present computer simulation indicates that Eskimo populations could sustain a rate of 30% female infanticide and still survive. Higher reported rates are explained as the combined result of female infanticide plus the tendency of ethnographers to overestimate the ages of juvenile females relative to juvenile males. (Au)

It begins with a brief sketch of the development of the concept of an international wildlife range and the subsequent myriad of proposals for the northern Yukon. A discussion of the biological characteristics of the Porcupine caribou herd follows .... Social, conservation, and industrial issues are then outlined in the context of land and resources planning and management. Special reference is made here to the role of native peoples and their use of the land and resources for traditional purposes, as well as their involvement in long-term planning and management. Existing international wildlife agreements are then critically evaluated .... The study concludes with possible elements of an international agreement and a critique of the most recent draft Convention between the United States of America and Canada for the Conservation of Migratory Caribou and their Environment. ... More than three quarters of Canada ... lies in the arctic and subarctic; the demographic-economic-cultural emphasis is distributed among several marginal regions isolated from one another by great distances. But nearly every province has parts of the arctic and subarctic regions - and thus the same problems of management. For the common mastering of this landscape zone with modern methods of technology, science and culture and thus the integration of the Canadian North into her image and self-image, Canada, as the largest western arctic country has the task of creating new possibilities for living in and with these regions. Lancaster Sound, a magnificent part of Canada's High Arctic, poses a great challenge for Canadians in planning for the future uses of our natural resources. Ecologically, the Sound is possibly the richest, most productive area in all the Arctic. ... The Sound is also the entrance to the famous Northwest Passage, and as such, is a potential transit route for increased shipping if industrial development of any kind proceeds in the Arctic. Since the Sound also holds a hydrocarbon potential, we have important decisions to make about the safety of possible oil and gas exploration and development here as we pursue our national objective of energy self-sufficiency. And weighing heavily in the balance of our considerations for future uses of Lancaster Sound are the interests of the native Inuit who continue to depend on the area's resources. ... This public discussion paper (Green Paper) outlines the physical, biological, social, and economic make-up of the region. It discusses the regional and national implications of a wide variety of uses, individually and in combination, and presents the major issues as seen by the members of the Working Group on the Lancaster Sound Regional Study. ... ... research was conducted during 1967 into the possible reasons for variable success in relocating Eskimo families to centres of industrial employment. A number of interim conclusions have been drawn. Where the migrants lack comprehension of the informal rules governing behaviour that is acceptable in southern communities, and where attempts are made by the migrants to retain former life patterns, assimilation and/or acceptance into the community is seriously retarded. Further, although technical training and grade-school education are necessary for migration, by themselves they are not sufficient for successful adjustment to community life-styles. The problem lies partly in community awareness of the migrant, and partly in the more insistent demands by the community for conformity of the migrant to 'normative' behaviour. In short, because the migrant is unaware of the informal rules governing acceptable behaviour in southern communities, and because his only recourse is to assume that the actual behaviour he observes is acceptable, he models his own behaviour accordingly and, in consequence, is rejected by the community. Although ... the volume of alcohol consumed by native people is not proportionately greater than that consumed by other groups, the social cost does appear to be disproportionately high. Native populations suffer an enormously high arrest rate for alcohol-related offenses, and there are pervasive evidences of alcohol-based disruption of ordinary life patterns. These facts point to significant variations in drinking styles. Such variations themselves reflect basically different meanings behind the use of alcohol. Au nord du 55e parallele au Quebec, vivent au-dela de 4,000 Inuit. Du aux conditions de vie difficiles, la mortalite infantile y est encore tres elevee. Une serieuse critique des donnees a demontre qu'un sous-enregistrement important faussait la vision que l'on peut se faire de la realite et a permis de saisir la veritable evolution du phenomene entre 1945 et 1970. En fait, le taux de mortalite infantile a continuellement diminue passant de 330 pour mille a 136 pour mille. L'amelioration des services medicaux est en grande partie responsable de ce changement. En fait foi la baisse de la mortalite directement rattachee a l'accouchement. Les villages de la region de la Baie d'Ungava connaissent une mortalite moins importante que celle de la region de la Baie d'Hudson parce qu'ils sont mieux desservis par les centres de sante. ... We shall ... review ... not only facts known in regard to the nutritional base of native people in the N.W.T. in aboriginal and changes experienced in transitional times, and effects observed on their health, but also discuss availability and nutritional value of traditional local food resources as well as accessibility and cost of imported alternatives and recommend actions to improve optimal nutrition at reasonable cost from use of local and/or imported sources. All native population groups in Northern Canada lived off hunting, fishing, and to a minor degree, food gathering in aboriginal times. ... Although some groups of both Inuit ... and Dene ... shared their predominant reliance or migrating caribou herds, marked differences in nutrition habits as well as different acculturation histories warrant separate discussion of the main native population groups. ... The purpose of this paper is to examine two approaches to health care in the North. The first, or discontinuous model, is rooted in Western medical praxis in which emphasis is placed on diagnosing and treating physical symptoms as a problem separate from the patients social and environmental relationships. The other shall be termed the Inuit model in which physical illness is seen as extending beyond the patient with societal and environmental effects and, therefore, is interpreted here as continuous, rather than disassociative. The paper is not intended as a review of disease treatment among Inuit nor of the development of the present system of care; rather, its intention is to analyze value conflicts between the two models. Health care in a Canadian Inuit village is predominantly the responsibility of the personnel associated with the cosmopolitan medical system. Traditional healers and folk remedies have largely disappeared .... However, much of the symbolic and conceptual cultural framework that once found expression in the traditional medical system remains more or less intact in the minds of the people. This paper argues that in a contemporary Inuit village, these traditional cultural understandings are being redefined and reexpressed through non-traditional institutions such as the Council and churches. A case is presented that demonstrates the role played by non-traditional institutions in facilitating the eventual resolution of alcohol abuse as a locally defined health problem. The paper recommends that health care planners acknowledge and support the emerging role of these institutions in the health care system. (Au)

Following the identification of an unexpectedly high percentage of high blood mercury levels in residents of Sugluk, Northern Quebec, a team visited the community to assess the situation and provide advice to the people. The review included a study of eating patterns, harvesting data and further hair testing. This paper discusses the findings of the eating pattern survey and the harvesting data, and shows how in combination they helped to elucidate the problem. Finally it outlines the recommendations which were made to the community, based on the findings. (Au)

The Native Council of Canada and provincial affiliate organizations have for the past two years researched the land claims of the Metis and Indians not covered by the Indian Act. This book presents two bases for claims identified by this research. The first basis for a claim is the historical and legal recognition of the Metis as a distinct people with an aboriginal right to the land. The second basis for a claim arises out of the legal definition of an Indian. Therefore the focus of this section is the means by which the non-status Indian has been excluded from the provision of the Indian Act. Articles and essays contained in the book appeared in the Native Council's newspaper, "Forgotten people", during the preceding year. (NPB)

Data from several censuses and for various areas of Canada have been exposed to analysis, but this report is limited to the censuses of 1961, 1971 and 1976 for Canada as a whole and some selected provinces. An analytic model already used in published and unpublished work is applied to the native populations of Canada. Four age and sex specific retention rates based on life table techniques are considered for the three censuses and the two inter-censal periods. In the absence of the ethnic question in 1976, 'survivals' since 1971 among language groups (mother tongue only) are used instead. Some discussion is offered of the importance of the differences in the treatment of 'non-responses' between censuses. A speculative projection is implied of language loyalties in the future assuming the continuation of past trends. (Au)

The primary objective of the Canadian Government in the North is to assist the residents to achieve a higher standard of living, quality of life and equality of opportunity through methods which are compatible with their preferences and aspirations. Development projects should be based on the economic and social needs of a community interwoven into the cultural fabric of the people. ... As a result of the Berger Inquiry, emphasis has been placed on renewable resource development North of 60. The Inquiry offered the residents the opportunity to voice their opinions concerning development. ... One of the resulting recommendations was that while some larger scale non-renewable resource development was viable, this activity should exist 'side-by-side' with traditional renewable resource activities. ... three renewable resource projects in the Mackenzie Delta [were] studied. The purpose of this case study is to review and analyse perceptions concerning the success of these projects. ... In the first case information will be gathered concerning whether the projects are in fact considered a success and the reason for this decision. ... In the second case, there may be certain characteristics that have contributed to the success of the projects or that have created problems. ... To achieve these ends a longitudinal study was conducted with particular emphasis placed on workers' attitudes, satisfaction and the degree of integration of work activities with participation in traditional home, community and economic activities. The three projects considered are the Aklavik Fur Cooperative, the Inuvik Serving Centre and the Nanook Fur Cooperative in Tuktoyaktuk. The aim of the investigator was to interview as many individuals along the lines of production to elicit views concerning this issue. Population studies in northern Canada are often troubled by limited or sketchy statistical information. This report examines the possibility of circumventing this shortage of data problem by supplementing census statistics with comparable but more current information from secondary sources. This report looked at one such set of records, the Yukon Health Care Insurance Plan. The main conclusion of this report is that the Yukon Health Care Insurance Plan records and its sister plans in the other provinces and the Northwest Territories have the potential to generate very powerful demographic data bases. These statistics, produced annually, would be extremely useful to public officials charged with managing social and economic programs; to private developers who require such data not only to efficiently plan mega projects but also to prepare for social assessment hearings on the impact of their projects; and to social scientists who need such a data base to tackle socially relevant demographic problems.

Les etudes portant sur les populations du Nord canadien donnent souvent des renseignements statistiques incomplets. La presente etude examine la possibilite de compenser ce manque de donnees en ajoutant aux statistiques du recensement des renseignements comparables, mais plus recents, provenant de sources secondaires. Nous nous attarderons ici a l'examen d'un de ces jeux de donnees, soit les dossiers du Regime d'assurance-maladie du Yukon, ci-apres le RAMY. La principale conclusion du rapport est que des registres tels ceux du RAMY ou de regimes semblables ailleurs au Canada peuvent constituer d'excellentes bases de donnees demographiques. Ces statistiques sont revisees annuellement et pourraient etre d'une grande utilite aux fonctionnaires charges de la gestion des programmes economiques et sociaux. Elles seraient egalement precieuses aux promoteurs qui requierent de telles donnees non seulement pour planifier efficacement des projets de grande envergure mais aussi en preparation aux enquetes sociales menees sur les repercussions des projets en question. Enfin, elles serviraient aux scientifiques qui doivent recourir a une telle base de donnees lorsqu'ils s'attaquent a des problemes demographiques ayant une portee sociale. (Au)

The James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement was signed in November 1975, two years before the Northeastern Quebec Agreement. These agreements between the federal and provincial governments involved three native populations: The Cree Indians and Inuit and the Naskapi Indians. The implementation of the agreements involves several aspects, some of which require a more detailed knowledge of the demographic components, such as the following matters: (a) the creation of a local and regional administration; (b) the organization of public services and justice; (c) the development of natural and social environment protection measures; (d) the promotion of the economic and social development of natives. The purpose of this study was to determine the demographic data required for the implementation of the agreements; to examine the various sources capable of providing this data; to evaluate their availability, and to make recommendations regarding the acquisition of this data and the execution of demographic studies.

En novembre 1975 etait signee la Convention de la Baie James et du Nord quebecois et quelque deux ans plus tard, celle du Nord-est quebecois. Ces conventions, conclues avec les gouvernements federal et provincial, touchent trois populations autochtones: d'une part, les Indiens cris et les Inuit et d'autre part, les Indiens naskapis. La mise en oeuvre des conventions concerne plusieurs aspects dont certains exigent une connaissance plus poussee des composantes demographiques. Il en est ainsi des domaines suivants: (a) la creation d'une administration locale et regionale; (b) l'organisation de services publics au niveau de l'education, de la sante, des services sociaux et de la justice; (c) l'elaboration de mesures de protection de l'environnement et du milieu social; (d) la promotion du developpement economique et social des autochtones. La presente etude a donc pour but de determiner les differentes donnees demographiques requises pour la mise en oeuvre des conventions, d'examiner les diverses sources pouvant fournir ces donnees et d'evaluer leur disponibilite et enfin de faire des recommandations quant a l'acquisition de ces donnees et a la realisation d'etudes demographiques. ... Following the presentation of the new Northern Development policy in 1971-72, ... the need to further develop a system of social indicators and social reporting was obvious, and it was in this context that the present work was undertaken. ... The most effective way to begin a long-term effort in social indicator development will be by: (1) organizing social statistics within a broad reporting framework so as to illuminate elements important to the National Objectives and the department's related programmes, (2) developing as much economic and social information as possible within the framework of a set of economic and social accounts, and (3) actually collecting (or generating) and analyzing the data. In the course of working with social information, a better theoretical understanding of socio-economic development in the North can be obtained by deductive methods. At the same time, the existence of a set of data can be useful for testing theories arrived at by inductive methods. (Au)

Methodology for the estimates of labour force activity in Yukon / Y.T. Economic Research and Planning Unit.
[Yellowknife : Economic Research and Planning Unit, Government of Yukon, 1979].
iii, 11p. : tables ; 28cm.
ACU

The Labour Force data was developed in response to a rapidly increasing need by government and private interest for some estimate of employment and labour force activity. The procedure used in calculating Labour Force and employment in Yukon is as follows: 1. Obtain an estimate of working aged population (15 years of age and over) from Yukon Health Care records. 2. Adjust the Health Care data to eliminate the known biases. 3. Using the labour force participation rates of Northern B.C. as a proxy for Yukon and apply these rates to Yukon's working population. This provides an estimate of labour force. 4. Estimate employment in Yukon from the Yukon Employment Survey. 5. Derive unemployment by subtracting the employment from the labour force. Every effort is made to remove errors in the data but some possible errors still exist. The possible errors include: a) possible inaccuracies in Health Care data. b) possible distortions in the Labour Force participation rates in the structure of northern B.C.'s economy is significantly different. c) possible errors in the Yukon Employment survey resulting from the use of a voluntary sample survey. ... The theme of this paper is that the enumeration of the small and scattered population of northern Canada is subject to a much greater range of error than the national population. As such, the objective of this paper is to provide the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with a brief, up-to-date survey of background information which it will require in the performance of its task. It is also expected to inform those directly involved in the northern economy of the more important facts about the resources, the people, the infrastructure, and give an indication of some of the more difficult problems which must be overcome. The study is based upon library research, information derived from various federal and territorial government publications and from many people familiar with the Northwest Territories. Because the economy of the north is in a continuous state of change, the description in this study of its state can be considered current only to December 1979. (Au)

Antenatal risk factors and management problems during labour and delivery were examined for 141 consecutive deliveries in Canadian Inuit of the eastern Arctic. The applicability of three risk scoring systems for antenatal use was evaluated. Pregnancies were categorized as being at high, moderate or low risk according to the authors' published criteria. Only two of the systems gave statistically valid predictions of the outcome of pregnancy in terms of risk categorization. Sensitivity and uniformity of the systems were lacking: the risk scores were low in 32% to 58% of the pregnancies in which the mother or the infant or both had problems during labour or delivery or both, and in 27% to 36% of the pregnancies in which the infant alone had problems. ... In the fall of 1974 the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was approached by the Census Long Range Planning Group ... to respond to a survey designed to determine what types of social, economic and demographic data were collected by the Operating Programs and how they were used. The survey was concerned not only with the types of Census data used, but also with our own in-house data information systems. Based on the results of this marketing survey which covered many users of Census data within federal, provincial and municipal governments as well as within the private sector, ... a Macro-Content Table [was developed] which delineates the types of information by social subject areas required by the respondents in the survey. ... One major conclusion may be drawen from the results of the survey. All three Operating Programs consider the Census an extremely important data collection vehicle for providing basic socio-economic and demographic information for various segments of the Canadian population and for such small geographic areas as Indian reserves and remote northern settlements. ... the Operating Programs have ranked Cultural and Other Background Characteristics first. However, ... high priorities [have been placed] on such subject areas as income, employment activity, demographics, education, migration and housing. ... (Au)

The Phase 2 study was intended to supplement the existing information about impaired driving in the Yukon so that the Yukon Impaired Driving Committee could design a platform of programs that would be most effective with Yukon drivers. The major purposes of the study were: (1) to supplement existing information about Yukon impaired drivers; (2) to supplement existing information about Yukon policies and procedures regarding impaired drivers; and (3) to identify countermeasure programs used elsewhere that could be applied to Yukon offenders. The information was collected through a series of individual studies and research projects and given to the multidisciplinary Committee and to the smaller Working Groups for use in program planning. ACU

The intention of this report was to examine the cost and delivery of programs for senior citizens in western Canada. A comparison could then be made to determine what programs were lacking in Yukon. Cost estimates could also be provided regarding the elimination of discrepancies that exist. We first determined that senior citizens in all of Canada are not well off, relative to other groups. At the local level we discovered that seniors in Yukon are less well off than their southern counterparts. This has resulted in a proportionately low number of senior citizens in Yukon. Presumably, other parts of the country are more attractive as retirement sites. To determine what could be done to make Yukon more attractive to senior citizens, we solicited information regarding services for seniors from numerous agencies and government departments in western Canada. ... Recommendations were then made regarding the expenditure of funds so as to make Yukon a more attractive retirement place for her senior citizens. ... (Au)

Northwest Territories population projections for the period 1979 to 1988 are presented in this report. ... all communities with populations greater than 200 persons were used. Those ... with ... less than 200 persons were allocated to regional aggregates termed "residuals" and projected as a single unit. Projection series were generated using a cohort component model incorporating the most recent demographic information and specified assumptions regarding natural increase and migration. ... The two projection series were as follows: Projection "A": ethnic-age-specific mortality and fertility rates were applied to the general population at risk. The "Other" ethnic group was treated differently than were the Inuit and Indian: the permanent "Other" group (made up of Metis and long-term non-native residents) took part in all natural increase processes, while a proportion of the "Other" group (termed non-permanent) was held fixed at its present level under the assumption of constant replacement. Projection "B": the procedure was identical to projection "A" except for the inclusion of historically defined levels of migration (1971 to 1978). Projection "A" provides the situation of zero net-migration, while projection "B" offers an alternative growth scenario incorporating historical levels of migration. Together these projections series identify a range of possible population growth in the Northwest Territories

The Mackenzie District is a multilingual area. There are six major language groups - Dogrib, Slave, Chipewyan, Loucheux, Eskimo and English. ... Language is a significant component of culture. The number of languages spoken and the pattern of language use provides an important indication of an individual's contact and familiarity with different cultures. The ability to speak another language, however, does not imply assimilation or identification with that language's cultural group. In a multilingual area the acquisition of the dominant language is only a prerequisite for assimilation and not necessarily part of that process. In this way a study of multilingualism and language use provides the ground work for studies of indigenous culture and language loss. ... This report presents the analysis of language use in four parts. The first ... presents an overview of multilingualism for the entire N.W.T. It analyses data presented in the published summary tables from the Northern Manpower Survey Program. The second section examines in greater detail the language diversity of different linguistic groups in the Mackenzie District. The third ... analyses the proportion of each language group retaining its mother tongue as the language most often used in the home. These findings were examined for variations by region of residence, age and education of the respondents. A final section presents data on the loss of native languages resulting from the penetration of English into the language groups. (Au)

The term acculturative stress refers to that range of states or individual behaviours which are difficult for the individual and disruptive for his social group. Two Cree communities were selected for study in 1969 prior to a hydroelectric project taking place in their areas and it was noted that the levels of stress and marginality were high in both samples. This high level has been interpreted as a function of the degree of acculturation which has already taken place. If the legal agreement with the hydroelectric authorities proves acceptable among the people, then the acculturative stress and pressures will eventually be reduced. (ASTIS)

... Within one generation a considerable proportion of people aided by flexible standards and tolerant, sometimes patronizing, administrators have learned to cope effectively with resources and difficulties presented in an urban-type environment. Despite widespread concern for the needs of the northern people and for environmental protection, a concern professedly shared by the federal government, the Bathurst Island controversy illustrates: 1) that the stated national northern development priorities of people and the environment before resource development continues to be mere rhetoric and is not supported by current realities; 2) that the process of community consultations is merely a facade, for the views of experienced hunters and trappers are not taken into consideration in decision-making; 3) that there is an inherent conflict of interests occurring in the one structure that exists to represent the peoples' interests and, in cases of a conflict, the interests of resource development companies prevail. ... The future of the North is dependent on its natural advantages: minerals, forests, the environment, and the attraction of these resources to business interests. The manufacturing base could grow if we recognize the problems and develop our own skills and initiative. The role played by the government in the North is, as you know, a very important one. Public services are vital and necessary and must be sustained in the future not only at the provincial level but at the local level also. The important thing, however, is that the government promote a feeling of optimism about the North in the business world so that development does not become a means to itself but the basis for growth. ... ... In many instances, ... the Netsilik Eskimo's own account of infanticide was a rationalization, covering deeper competitive motives. As such, dysfunctional elements are suggested in Netsilik aboriginal social organization, stemming from the contradiction of the general Eskimo ethos of generosity with their own somewhat less than generous behavior in respect of the strategy for kindred endogamy. I would finally suggest, therefore, that the synchronic comparative analysis of the infanticide and other social practices of the Iglulik, Taqramiut, Copper and Netsilik Eskimo may also be regarded as providing a diachronic model of the response of an Eskimo social organization to the conditions of increasing environmental pressure. ... (Abstracts of papers - International Symposium on Circumpolar Health, 5th, Copenhagen, Denmark, 9-13 August, 1981. [s.l. : s.n., 1981], p. 39)

Abstract only.

Knud Rasmussen and his colleagues collected during their epic 5th Thule expedition 1921-1924 a great wealth of data concerning material and spiritual culture, physical anthropology and ethnology of Central Arctic Eskimo (Inuit). Their sex and age detailed counts of many Inuit groups must be considered when discussing odd peculiarities of the Inuit population structure in the 1961 and 1971 Census. ... The population structure recorded in local Arctic Surveys reflects very well with deep incisions large fetal and infant losses suffered during waves of epidemics following opening of trading posts. World-wide rather than local socio-medical events have influenced the demographic picture of the Inuit in recent decades: Shortening of lactation led to population explosion with sudden expansion of the bottom age group in the 1961 Census and contraceptive pills reversed this trend since the late 1960's. (Abstracts of papers - International Symposium on Circumpolar Health, 5th, Copenhagen, Denmark, 9-13 August, 1981. [s.l. : s.n., 1981], p. 9)
Abstract only.

Five thousands (5000) Inuit live in the Northern Area ... of Quebec .... Only in the last two (2) years has it been possible to collect meaningful data on population numbers, birth rates, mortality rates and morbidity patterns for the whole Inuit population living in this area .... The purpose of this paper is to provide the most relevant parts of this information. The data collection was made through the various health establishments both in the North and in the South .... The main results are that the population has increased quickly in the last ten (10) years. The birth rate is high but declining slightly, the mortality rate is rather high if the age structure of the population is taken into consideration, the life expectancy is barely over sixty years old. The morbidity patterns are different from the southern parts of the province with a higher proportion of infectious diseases and a very high number of out patients consultations per capita. An attempt is made to explain these finding and to assess their importance for the planning of health services in the Northern-Quebec. (Au)

Nutritional effects of introduction of a wage economy to a High Arctic community / Eaton, R.D.P. Verdier, P. Schaefer, O.
(Abstracts of papers - International Symposium on Circumpolar Health, 5th, Copenhagen, Denmark, 9-13 August, 1981. [s.l. : s.n., 1981], p. 9)
Abstract only.

A nearby mining development and oil exploration in the High Arctic brought a significant increase of cash inflow to a previously isolated northeastern arctic community of 350 Inuit. A Health and Nutritional Survey involving approximately 90% of the population was undertaken just before opening of the mine and ... four years later in order to assess the possible impact of change to a wage economy. The most striking changes noted in 1980 vs. 1976 were increases in serum lipids and skin-fold thickness in adults and improved hemoglobin values in children. The trend to increased serum lipids and greater obesity with a more sedentary lifestyle and greater reliance on store bought food with their higher carbohydrate and fat content was expected and in line with previously reported findings in an urbanized Inuit population in the Western Arctic. The improved hemoglobin levels in children were not expected but may be related to the greater availability and consumption of fresh fruits and vegetables as well as to educational efforts to decrease sweet and junk food consumption. Morbidity patterns did not yet reveal marked changes but it is expected that the trend to hyperlipidemia and obesity may find in time a reflection in increased rates of coronary artery, gallbladder and other morbidity. Methods to encourage the participation of native people of northern Canada in health care delivery / Martin, J.D.
(Abstracts of papers - International Symposium on Circumpolar Health, 5th, Copenhagen, Denmark, 9-13 August, 1981. [s.l. : s.n., 1981], p. 27)
Abstract only.

... the author presents a number of suggested approaches to meaningfully involve native people in the health care system both as health care workers and as consumers informed about and responsible for individual health. The challenge of a northern population with a majority of native people, a large proportion of whom are unemployed or underemployed, and a health service with less than one-third of available positions filled by indigenous peoples and a population ill informed and minimally involved in the promotion of personal health, is discussed. Solutions are proposed including attitudinal changes on the part of non-natives, training in special medical and nursing procedures, career development programs operated by native people, periodic health conferences and changes in the educational system. Consistent with these proposals, projects now underway in the Northwest Territories are reviewed including a native employment and career development program, cultural orientation, health conferences, regional boards of management of hospitals, health committees and the employment of health educators. The overall philosophy of community development is emphasized. (Au)

This report describes the economic and social patterns of life for the Inuit community of Resolute on Cornwallis Island and for the smaller, more isolated community of Kuvinaluk which is located at Creswell Bay on Somerset Island ... The study focuses on the Inuit population but particular characteristics of Euro-Canadians who reside and work within the Resolute area are also described, in order to account for some of the direct and subtle interactions between the two groups. ... The report on the research is subtitled a socio-economic baseline study, with the year 1976 serving as the reference point for describing the current conditions of life that exist within the two communities. ... The key issue presented in this discussion paper is whether the benefits of the Native Sport and Recreation Program warrant continuation of the program into the indefinite future. If the program is to be continued a decision must be made as to which department should have continuing responsibility for the program. Three departments - Indian and Northern Affairs, Secretary of State and Fitness and Amateur Sport - have involvement in the field of Native recreation. Options are presented to combine the programs in some manner under one departmental roof which will require the establishment of an effective coordination mechanism between the three departments. In the report, OBSTACLES, which was released in February 1981, the needs and concerns of disabled Native persons constituted just one part of the Special Committee's examination of effects of disability among all Canadians. Since February, however, the Committee has been made acutely aware that the Native population is a unique sector of the overall Canadian population. It is a sector which is frequently misunderstood by Non-Native Canadians, and one which is isolated from many of the resources which disabled Canadians who are not Native, can utilize on a regular basis. The needs of disabled Native people, therefore, require special consideration. This follow-up report focuses on the key areas of their lives where additional Federal Government action must be taken before many disabled Natives can be expected to help themselves. [Includes the Committee's twelve recommendations]. (Au)

This report presents the results of a study to determine and describe the current and future social and economic setting of northern Manitoba. Specifically, the objectives of the study are to assess and explain the dynamic interactions which comprise the socio-economic system of northern Manitoba, and to project relevant variables within that system to the years 1981, 1986, and 1991. The outcome of the study provides the basis upon which an assessment of the impacts of the proposed Polar Gas Project may be undertaken. The study was conducted during the period December, 1977 to April, 1978 .... Estimates of future change in relevant variables are made and future employment, population and labour force levels are projected. ... The findings ... demonstrate that social and economic disparities exist in northern Manitoba, and that moderate population and economic growth will occur in the industrial north, while rapid population growth will characterize the remote north. The labour force of Northwestern Ontario as a whole manifests a clear pattern of growth. It grew at an average annual rate of 1.4 percent between 1961 and 1971, and is expected to grow at an average annual rate of 2.3 percent between 1971 and 1981. However, between 1978 and 1981 the rate is projected to drop below 1.0 percent. The Region will thus enter the 1980's with a labour force whose rate of growth has sharply declined. Striking as this larger trend is, it means little unless it is possible to study the smaller trends that make it up. ... The purpose of this report is to answer these questions. It considers three main sources of change in the labour force: the education sector, net migration, and "residual" change. ... (Au)

This report evaluates the trends in the growth of the labour force in Northwestern Ontario until the year 1981. The distinctive feature of this analysis is its recognition that historical data are the end-product of many complex interactions, and that meaningful projections can only be made when the interactions that generate the observable facts are understood. For this reason, rather than present "straight-line" or "fixed-coefficient" extrapolations of past data, this report identifies some of the factors underlying the growth of the labour force, and demonstrates their dynamic effects on this growth. Such an analysis is of practical value because the essential dynamic effects of these factors often persist in spite of many of the government actions that are conventionally undertaken to improve the growth trends in the labour force. By explicitly describing some of these complex interactions and their dynamic effects on the growth of the labour force, the analysis presented in this report should assist in understanding the response of the Northwestern Ontario Region to specific social, political, or economic changes, and also assist, when desirable, in designing government policies that can achieve long-term results. ... This report shows how economic growth has occurred in Northwestern Ontario during the past century. It begins with a brief history of the Region's economy and politics, and describes the growth of its population since the beginning of the century. Next it considers the role of transportation in making possible the development of the Region's economic potential. Finally it outlines the development of each of the most important industries in the Region, beginning with the first industry to be of economic importance: the fur trade, agriculture, logging, pulp and paper, mining, tourism, and manufacturing. Each chapter concludes with a statistical description of the respective industry's current employment. (Au)

The central focus of this review is local communities in Canada's resource hinterland. The two guiding questions are: (1) What are the impacts of large scale resource development on community social life? and (2) What are the characteristics of a community which affect its capacity to mediate and control such impacts? The study is centred around the premise that a vital community social life and a viable locally oriented economy are necessary to the adjustment of families and individuals in communities located in the Canadian hinterland. It is also suggested that major development can be implemented in such a way that community social vitality and local economic viability can be maintained. ... The general aim of this review is to draw attention to literature which focuses the above concerns and to appropriate from that literature those insights and conclusions which advance understanding of the processes and issues pertinent to this study. One of the major bodies of relevant literature deals substantively with the analysis of communities and community processes. The other deals with the methodology of social impact assessment. (Au)

In May of 1977 the authors were asked by the Polar Gas Project to undertake a survey on the social and economic development of the settlement of Chesterfield Inlet, N.W.T. The purpose was to prepare a baseline report against which the planning of a natural gas pipeline from High Arctic gas fields, and a shipping route through Chesterfield Inlet, might be considered. ... the authors sought permission from the Settlement Council to undertake the work. Although permission was initially granted, it was later withdrawn while the Council reconsidered its position. By the time the way was made clear and permission again granted, the field season was well advanced. Furthermore, new pressures in the settlement ... convinced the authors that for the sake of the people the timing was wrong to carry out extensive field work. The report is, therefore, of necessity incomplete, consisting of the compilation and analysis of data mainly from various territorial and federal government sources. The important information from the people themselves, through questionnaires and interviews, is missing. ... (Au)

The objective of the study was to develop comprehensive socio-economic profiles of the communities of Gillam, Bird and Sundance in northern Manitoba. As well, based on analysis of base socio-economic data and the results of field interviews, significant social and economic trends were to be projected up to the year 1991. In addition, a certain amount of additional baseline information relating to Gillam itself was to be gathered and documented. (Au)

What follows is an initial attempt to perceive certain salient aspects of the structure and dynamics of a small and recently-developed bi-cultural human aggregation, living in geographically isolated circumstances, but governed substantially by influences and services exterior to the settlement. The purpose of this brief report is to make a tentative assessment of the organizational and economic capacities of the settlement, against a background of the two highly variant cultures and their adaptive mechanisms. It appears to be deemed desirable to attempt some degree of predictability as to the likely impact on this settlement of incursions from the southern world. ... (Au)

Firstly, since the project in both its construction and operation stages may have an impact on these communities, it was deemed necessary to develop socio-economic baseline profiles for use in identifying and assessing the potential direct and indirect effects on them. Secondly, since the arbitrarily delineated "Central Arctic Keewatin Region" contains and crosses a number of functioning subregions based on transportation, communication, and resupply linkages and the boundaries of various administrative districts, the linkages that exist (or which are being planned) need to be set out so that the projects's impact on them can be identified. ...
